GENERAL OMAR NELSON BRADLEY

General Omar N. Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has a unique background of military and civilian experience.

Successively in World War II, he commanded first a division, then a corps, an army and finally a group of armies. This last command, the 12th United States Army Group in Europe, numbered more than 1,300,000 combat troops and was the largest body of American soldiers ever to serve under a single field commander. The Twelfth Army Group at its peak, consisted of four armies -- General Courtney Hodges' First, General George Patton's Third, Lieutenant General William Simpson's Ninth and Lieutenant General Leonard Gerow's Fifteenth.

Except for his original divisional assignment -- a pre-combat training job given him as a result of his experience as commandant of The Infantry School -- Bradley won his wartime advancement on the battlefield. A Corps commander in North Africa and later in Sicily, he took an Army across the Normandy beaches and ended the war in Germany with an Army Group.

Three weeks after V-E Day, Bradley was drafted to become head of the vast eight-billion dollar Veterans Administration during its critical post-war demobilization period.

It was of this task that Bradley once said in an address, "There is no job I would rather not have; none in which I would want to do better."

As Chief of VA, Bradley was popularly said to have presided over "the largest business in the world" during its toughest days. In this post, he broadened his relationships with a vital cross-section of the civilian public, and as a result went into the Army's top job as a Washington administrator with extensive experience, becoming Chief of Staff of the Army in February, 1948. A year and a half later he assumed his present position as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Born in Clark, Missouri, on February 12, 1893, Bradley was named Omar for an editor friend of the family and Nelson for the local doctor. His parents, John Smith Bradley and Mary Hubbard Bradley, remained in the Clark-Higbee area until the father's death in 1908, when young Bradley and his mother moved to Moberly, Missouri.

Bradley's appointment to West Point in 1911 came after he won a Congressional vacancy at the academy. He graduated 44th in the class of 1915, along with nearly two score men who rose to general rank in

UNCLASSIFIED

World War II. Of his class, Bradley was the first to become a brigadier general. His promotion came in February, 1941, when as a lieutenant colonel he was jumped to brigadier general at the recommendation of General Marshall to become Commandant of The Infantry School. In this post, Bradley set up the Infantry Officer Candidate program that eventually commissioned more than 45,000 combat leaders before the end of the war.

Bradley's commissioning as a second lieutenant of Infantry on graduation from West Point June 12, 1915, was followed on July 1, 1916, by a promotion to first lieutenant. He rose to the temporary rank of major in World War I while serving with the 14th Infantry Regiment, but reverted to captain in 1920 in the general post-war reduction of the Army.

After the war, Bradley was assigned to ROTC duty at South Dakota State College, and then was ordered to a four-year tour in 1920 as instructor in mathematics at the Military Academy. In 1925, he graduated from the Advanced Course at The Infantry School, Fort Benning, Georgia, and was ordered to duty in Hawaii. In 1927 and 1928 he was in charge of National Guard and Reserve Affairs for the Hawaiian Islands.

He graduated from the Command and General Staff School in 1929, and then was assigned as instructor in tactics and weapons at the Infantry School. Assignment to the Army War College, Washington, from which he graduated in 1934, followed his four-year tour at Benning. After graduation from the War College he was assigned to West Point as an instructor in tactics and later became plans and training officer of the Academy. He served there until June, 1938, when he reported to Washington for General Staff Duty.

Bradley became Assistant Secretary of the General Staff in 1939, and served in this capacity until February, 1941, when, as a brigadier general, he was sent to Benning. Bradley was given his own division -- the 82nd Infantry -- within two months after Pearl Harbor. His promotion to major general came on February 15, 1942. Four months later, in June, 1942, Bradley was transferred from the 82nd -- which was soon to be designated the 82nd Airborne Division -- to command the 28th Infantry Division at Camp Livingston, Louisiana.

Early in 1943, Bradley was called to the North African Theater, where his classmate General Eisenhower placed Bradley in command of the II Corps. It was this II Corps that smashed through units of the Afrika Korps in Northern Tunisia to reduce Hill 609, take Bizerte and with the British 1st and 8th Armies end the war in Africa. The II Corps prisoner bag numbered 40,000 troops.

The day after the collapse of the enemy in Tunisia, he was enroute back to Algiers to help plan the invasion in Sicily, and on July 10, 1943, invaded Sicily with his II Corps.

When a ground force commander was needed to make the invasion of Normandy, Bradley was summoned to England. In a flying trip to the United States, he selected his First Army staff, brought it to England, and on June 6, 1944, landed in France with his First Army to break the Atlantic Wall.

On July 26, Bradley's First Army troops smashed through the German lines at St. Lo and opened the way through Avranches for the speedy liberation of France. On August 1, Bradley reinforced the Third Army with First Army divisions and committed Patton's forces through the breached enemy wall. He then relinquished the First Army to Hodges and assumed overall command of American ground forces from the Twelfth Army Group. It was this group of Armies that comprised the huge combat forces of the First, Third, Ninth and Fifteenth American Armies.

In the spring of 1945, after his American armies had smashed the German winter attacks and broken down the Siegfried Line to push on to the Rhine, Bradley was given his fourth star.

On August 15, 1945, he became Administrator of the Veterans Administration, Washington, D. C. He was relieved as Veterans' Administrator on December 1, 1947, in order to familiarize himself with Army problems before taking on new duties as Chief of Staff.

On February 7, 1948, General Bradley became Chief of Staff, United States Army, succeeding General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower.

He was sworn in as the first Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in the Department of Defense August 16, 1949.
